Remember the olden days, when a Nintendo Wii was worth a bunch of money? During an interview at the E3 Show, Xbox WorldWide Studios head Phil Spencer said Sony's PlayStation 4 was an interesting prospect because "What it's showing is a PC-type of machine that doesn't look like a desktop machine, doesn't look like a traditional game console." Spencer talked about the transition that the gaming industry is currently going through, with new consoles and hardware platforms like the Xbox 360 and Wii U seeing their time come to end. "I think we're in the period where you take a long look at the last generation of gaming hardware, and think about your future and where you're going to go," Spencer said. "Xbox is still a hardcore gaming platform today, with the highest-selling console. We have just not looked into the future and thought about how to make it into the next cycle of the business. We haven't done it. "You think about all of those consoles that are winding down and you think about your customers and how you want to continue to deliver value to them," he added. "We're a young console. It feels like we're at the tip of a generation of gaming, and it's something that we'll need to understand and address." Spencer explained the two key strategies Microsoft are taking with the Xbox One: "We're making a platform that will last us forever, because that's who we are. "We're also making it a very hardcore platform, because that's how our customers want it to be. At the same time 50b96ab0b6
